Imbalance of Power Defined

Understanding Capital as a Function of Power

Physical Capital refers to the physical size differential between a student who is victimized and the aggressor.

Symbolic Capital refers to the items and belongings, typically sought after or favored, that separates a student who is victimized and the aggressor.

Economic Capital refers to a personal, or family, financial differential between a student who is victimized and the aggressor.

Informational Capital refers to the social knowledge differential (e.g., gossip) between a student who is victimized and the aggressor.

Cultural Capital refers established cultural norms within a given environment that limits a victimized students entry into preferred social groups, while enables the entry for the aggressor.

Social Capital refers to the social network with which a student is embedded, where victimized students tend to have a more limited network, while aggressors may have an expanded network.

Imbalance of Power Examples

Examples Include but are not limited to:

- An older student aggresses towards a younger student.
- A student who is more “popular” and has more social and cultural capital aggresses towards a students who is less “popular”.
- A group of students aggress towards an individual student.
- A student or group of students aggress towards a student or group of students who cannot protect themselves due to a disability, lack of resources, or limited social support.
- Electronically – A student posts an embarrassing picture via social media without a person’s knowledge, consent, or awareness.

Determining a Repeated Pattern:

Repetition refers to the frequency with which an individual is subject to bullying. While there is currently no rule of thumb related to a specific timeframe with which aggression must occur to be considered bullying, a few factors should be considered:

•Repetition does NOT have to be the same topography* of bullying

•Repetition does NOT have to include the same aggressor, group of aggressors, victim, or group of victims (i.e., An aggressor can bully more than one student, A victim can be victimized by more than one aggressor)

•Repetition does NOT have to occur within the same environment
In addition to the above points, the fear or likelihood of repetition should be considered, including the stability of environmental, social, academic, and prevention conditions. In other words, if these conditions remain stable following the initial bullying experience, the likelihood of repetition increases.

*Topography of bullying means how the bullying looks or the form, e.g. physical aggression, verbal aggression, cyberbullying, etc.

Repetition Examples

- A group of students target an individual student before school by selecting one member of the group to throw a ball at his head and laugh as he attempts to dodge. Every day a different member of the group takes a turn.
- A student shoulder checks a younger student on Monday; calls a student with a disability a derogatory name on Tuesday; and on Wednesday pushes another student out of their seat on the bus.
- A student calls a girl in her class a racial slur; on another occasion, she pushes this same girl into a locker. Later that week, she makes sure that all of the girls in the class ignore her.
- Electronically - A student posts hateful comments about a peer on social media. After this same student gets caught, she continues to post anonymously and encourages others to post hateful comments towards this same peer.

Intent Definition & Examples

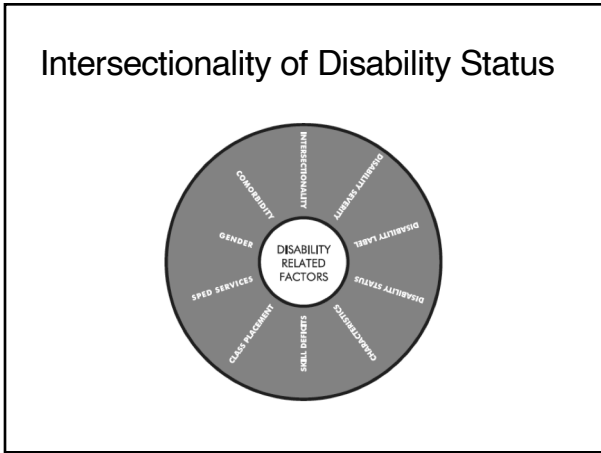

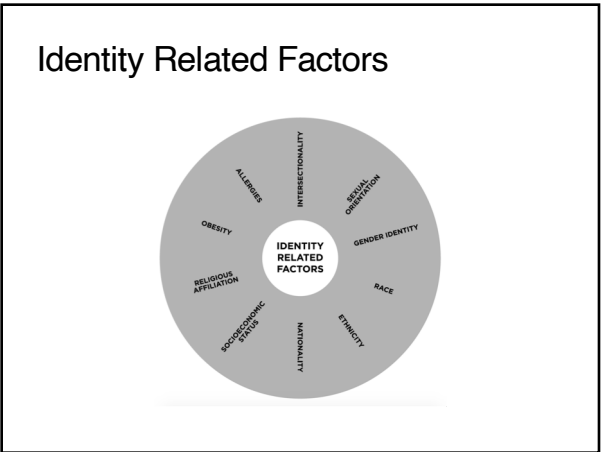

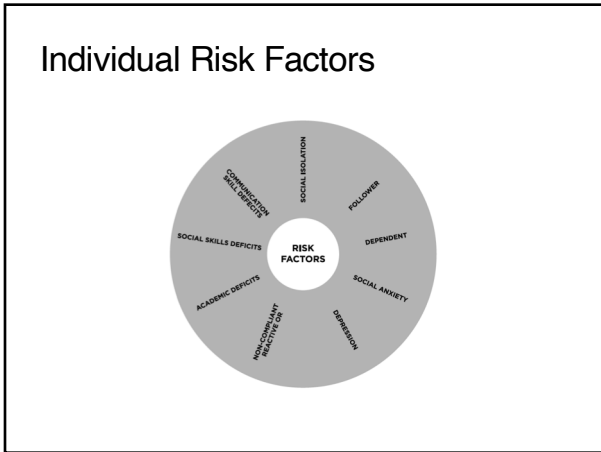

Bullying is a proactive form of aggression that is grounded in the intent to cause physical, emotional, or social harm. Therefore, bullying, as a form of aggression, is purposeful on the part of the aggressor.

Examples of Intent:

- An older student exclaims to his peer group, “Watch This!”, and walks over to a younger student, pushes him to the ground, and laughs.
- A group of students begin calling another student by a derogatory nickname, even though this student expresses his displeasure.
- A group of students act like one of their peers is invisible, and encourage everyone else in the class to do the same.
- Electronically – A student posts a compromising picture of a peer on social media with a caption that is extremely hurtful.

Justification

Outcomes

Psychosomatic outcomes can include physical illness and symptoms, sleep disturbances.

Psychosocial outcomes can include depression, anxiety, low self-esteem, stress, suicidal attempts and ideation.

Behavioral outcomes can include internalizing and externalizing behavioral problems and patterns.

Social outcomes can include peer rejection, trouble resolving peer conflict, social and communication skill deficits, increased levels of delinquent behaviors.

Educational outcomes can include academic deficits, poor academic outcomes, low levels of school engagement, and increased absenteeism.

Types of Bullying

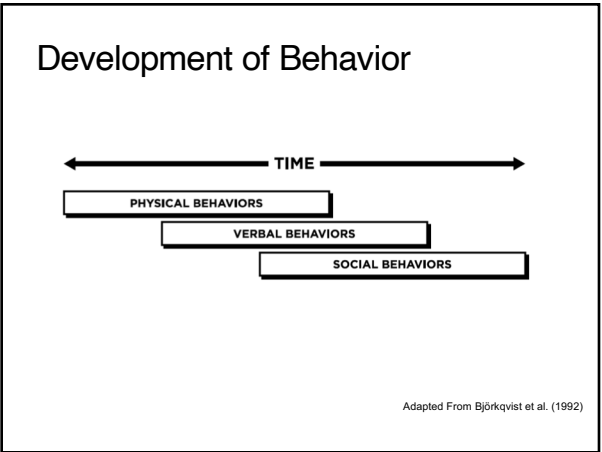

Physical Bullying involves the use of physical force (e.g., hitting, kicking, slapping, tripping, spitting) to victimize an individual or group of students.
